| Garuda Main Hall 2A | 13:00-13:45 | Thai Peroxide | Salmonella, Campylobacter & Listeria control Strategies in Poultry Farms & Processing through Green Oxidative Chemistries | English | Public | Shailendra Singh, Vice President - Global Sales and Marketing Head | Poultry farms, Hatcheries and Slaughter houses | Salmonella represents a significant public health concern worldwide, primarily associated with foodborne illnesses originating from poultry products. This presentation aims to provide an overview of effective strategies and control measures implemented in poultry farms and slaughterhouses to mitigate the risk of Salmonella, Campylobacter and Listeria contamination and ensure food safety. The discussion will then focus on the primary sources of Salmonella contamination in poultry farms and slaughterhouses, including factors such as biosecurity, feed, water, and wildlife. Furthermore, the presentation will delve into the various control measures implemented throughout the poultry production chain to minimize Salmonella contamination globally. It will also highlight different approaches and chemistries approved for disinfection and their pros and cons towards human and environment health. The utilization of advanced technologies using green chemistries and novel approaches to control Salmonella. Research papers would be shared for containing the biofilms in the poultry farms and also a comparison of Salmonella negative results would be shared using interventions with prevalent chemistries. Real life case studies would be shared using the green chemistry of Per Acetic Acid interventions in the big slaughter houses and the Salmonella results pre and post intervention. Towards the end presentation will share the impact of Per Acetic Acid intervention on the wastewater treatment and its impact on the BOD of the wastewater treatment plant. Finally, it will be concluded by highlighting the key takeaways from successful Salmonella control strategies implemented in poultry farms and slaughterhouses, emphasizing the significance of a holistic and integrated approach involving stakeholders, regulators, and industry players |
